Canada's Progress

IT IS APPARENT THAT CANADA is emerging from the war with greatly increased maturity and with high prestige among the other nations among the people living here make only one per cent of the total. The state of the world, Canada has ranked second, third or fourth from the top in many fields of service to the Allied cause, and at the British World Conference, where it was said "reaction rife," Canada was given special place among the nations, according to a standard based on national income, foreign trade and buildings of gold and foreign exchange. At the recent World Security Conference at San Francisco, Canada proved to have influence and authority when her delegates took part in the discussion of the League of Nations. Her delegates have demonstrated their ability to successfully carry out great undertakings, and they also brought about a final ratification of the great provisions of their treaty, both here and in other lands.

Future Hard To Predict

It has been said that "never before has there been a time when it was so hard to read the face of the future," and there is much truth in that opinion. Experience in the pre-war years does not lead us to be over-optimistic for the future. It is true that the tragedy of unemployment and depression, there remains, however, the picture of what our people were able to accomplish for war, and there is every reason to believe that with continued determination and co-operation we could deal with the problem of peace. War conditions created a demand for labor and unusually high standards for industry and for our products, both at home and abroad. It is clear that the return to normal conditions will require a long and arduous effort, and it is, unquestionably the problems involved in this are far-reaching and of the utmost complexity. When compared, however, to the problems of production, shipping, and other branches of industry which had to be pushed and effectively solved, it does not appear as impossible and it is not unreasonable to hope that we will be able to meet them.

Foreign Trade Is Important

It is agreed that much of our hope for the future lies in maintaining and expanding our foreign trade. Figures show that before the present war, Canada's foreign trade was about 10 per cent of the total of the United States. It is now about 15 per cent. The question of markets for our products is a matter of great importance to the people here. This is being dealt with both by domestic and international bodies, and efforts are being made to maintain these markets. The Canadian government is working to increase the production of our farm products. Dr. Eric MacGill, chief agricultural economist of the Canadian government, has said that the production of our farm products, both at home and abroad, is a matter of great importance to the people here. This is being dealt with both by domestic and international bodies, and efforts are being made to maintain these markets.
